

to remove my email address from their list. I also checked the leadextreme.com web site and found a statement on Lead Extreme's main web page that admitted that they market via unsolicited email.

8. In August 2003, I confronted Ms. Egan with this information and Ameriquet's apparent lack of concern and due diligence. Ms. Egan admitted to telling Lead Extreme to remove email addresses, and I told her in words to the effect that a more appropriate response would be to cease doing business with a company engaging in these practices. Ms. Egan then transferred me to Rick Davies in Ameriquet's legal department.
9. Mr. Davies told me that he was aware that his affiliates send large email marketing campaigns, but took the position that Ameriquet was not liable for the emails sent by "third parties." I told Mr. Davies in words to the effect that I believed Ameriquet was responsible for fraudulent and unlawful advertising that they were knowingly paying for.
10. I continued to respond to fraudulent mortgage spams with decoy information over a period of approximately two years. Almost all resulted in an answer back from Ameriquet.
11. The fictitious names, general locations, general dates, and contact telephone numbers are as follows:

12. Each of the decoy contacts listed above resulted in a response from Ameriquest, where I typically "played along" as the decoy persona seeking to refinance his mortgage. On a number of occasions I mentioned that I had responded to a spam email, and on almost all of these occasions the Ameriquest representative did not express any surprise, and on several occasions the representatives admitted that Ameriquest generated sales leads through spam.
13. One such email, purportedly from a "Taylor Askew," was received by my server on or about December 22, 2004. This email was part of a pattern of over 3,500 spams received from February 2004 through April, 2005 that share a number of common characteristics. This email was sent to my client, cdisolutions.com. The domain registration information for cdisolutions.com has always indicated a registration to an Oklahoma company, and since approximately November 2003, has been registered with Domain Name Servers at "oklahoma-isp.net," specifically ns1.oklahoma-isp.net and ns2-oklahoma-isp.net. Likewise, since that time, the DNS MX (mail server) record associated with cdisolutions.com, (which is how the rest of the world knows where to send email addressed to this domain name), has been a host within the oklahoma-isp.net domain, specifically mail.oklahoma-isp.net.
14. I have also received fraudulent spam emails from this same series of spams that were addressed to the geographic ohwww.norman.ok.us domain.
15. I responded to the "Taylor Askew" spam as a representative sample of the larger pattern of ongoing spam apparently sent by the same person(s), clicking on the link which took me to the "www.bettermortgagetoday.com" web site. I filled in the web page form using the name "Taylor Askew" as the decoy. While I selected a plausible address in Texas to go along with the Texas telephone number I had procured for this purpose, the pull-down menu for the state also included Oklahoma as an option.
